Experience

1987 - PR TECHNE KRAFT, d/b/a ... an architectural and interiors studio

Role: Architect - Designer - Engineering - CA -- Builder - Business

To explore historical meaning, context, materials, and building form, all the while, incorporating the client’s needs, budget, and an integrated-engineering basis to create places with interesting space and “well” function.

... firmly on its way to being the third reliever airport for Chicago O’Hara is Gary-Chicago Airport. Techne Kraft has completed the architectural and engineering design services for several projects over the last 15-years, including in 2014 a $3,400,000 FBO & Tenant Hangar for B. Coleman Aviation; in 2006 the $1.6 million Administration Office and Snow Removal Equipment additions to the existing SRE building; in 2011 the design for a new $1.3 million electrical vault; and in 1999 the $9,000,000 CM-delivered Hangar (with rapid open hangar doors).

... conceptual design in 2012, an Urban Infill project for the Swatara Area of Hershey, PA. The challenge was to develop a small lot and existing one-story studio affected by zoning and high price-per-foot. With no allowable building area remaining it became a vertical urban tower, similar to late-medieval Europe in Italy. It created a first floor studio, a second floor living space, and a third floor bedroom, with roof access. Fitting, as Hershey was known for its Italian immigrant population and iconic imagery.

... finished in the spring of 2007, Freeman Field’s New GA Terminal is more than an administration center, a public meeting space, and a way-station for passengers and pilots. Its imagery pays tribute to the historic past of this airport, which was an advanced pilot training station during WWII. With a tight budget of $731,000, and though the restaurant space was not completed, this facility is probably one of my favorite accomplishments in idea and function.
